Acupuncture Research Update

Acupuncture Outperforms Drugs in the Treatment of Headaches

A recent study compounding on prior research shows that acupuncture combined with herbs has proven to be more effective at treating vascular headaches than drugs. The previous research into the efficacy of acupuncture as a treatment for migraines concluded that acupuncture is comparable to modern drugs for treatment of migraines. This for this study the researchers increased the strength of the acupuncture treatment by adding herbal medicine as an adjunct to the acupuncture. The acupuncture and herbal medicine outperformed Nimodipine, a drug prescribed for frequent headaches. If you suffer from frequent headaches and drugs just don't seem to be providing the relief you're looking for then consult an acupuncturist about a treatment that has proven to be clinically more effective than drugs.
